The beautiful Murlough House where we'll be staying. Built in the 1800's. It was while staying here that C.S. Lewis was inspired to write the Chronicles of Narnia Series.

This isn't your average trip to Ireland.
It's a pilgrimage that includes meditation, prayer, fellowship and worship.

Ireland is a wonderful place. From this enchanted island in the Atlantic, out of reach or interest by the ancient Romans of Patrick's day and thus not within the realm or rule of the Empire, God initiated what would become a movement of the Holy Spirit to effect the continent of Europe and beyond. Patrick was God's chosen servant, a unique man, for a unique time with a powerful message of the cross of Christ.

The unusual circumstances of Patrick's life resulted in an awe-inspiring paradigm of missions and missionary practice for Christians ever since. His life is a prime example of God's call for all believers to practice a life of forgiveness. Patrick suffered captivity as a slave. He was forced to live a life of solitude in Ireland as a shepherd for 6 years. After escaping, he eventually went back to the people to whom he had been a slave and voluntarily served them. He evangelized, and planted churches there, the rest of his life. He learned their language and lived with and ministered to them in their heart language. The bold actions of this humble man resulted in the whole nation being evangelized. God used Patrick to launch a major movement which many today credit Patrick and his followers for contributing to the eventual vibrancy of the Church in Europe. In the providence of God, Celtic Christianity was the means by which God saved the Church from the malaise of spiritual darkness that swept over the continent in the Dark Ages.

It has been my privilege to create a powerful spiritual experience that is as reasonable a cost as possible. The first week is a planned schedule of places to visit that reflect the life of Patrick. We'll finish the trip in Dublin where we'll do a couple things together with the rest of the time for you to choose things of your own interest.

Please join us in this great adventure!
